CAPS Pneumonia and exposure to household air pollution in children under the age of 5 in rural Malawi 2014 - 2016

STUDY TYPE

ABSTRACT

Exposure to household air pollution is associated with an increased risk of pneumonia in children in low- and middle-income countries, however exposure-response data are limited and there are uncertainties around the extent to which biomass-fueled cookstoves can reduce these exposures

Scope

NOTES

- 1) Can an advanced cookstove intervention that substantially reduces biomass smoke exposure relative to an open fire prevent pneumonia in children under 5 years old in Malawi?
- 2) How affordable and cost effective is the intervention from household, healthcare system and societal perspectives?
- 3) What can be learned from trial participants and non-participants about adoption of the intervention that could inform effective implementation of the trial findings in the future?

Coverage

GEOGRAPHIC COVERAGE

CAPS was a cluster-randomized controlled trial with two arms of equal size comparing the effects of a cleaner-burning biomass-fueled cookstove intervention to the continued use of traditional open fire cooking on pneumonia incidence (primary outcome previously reported) and CO exposures (secondary outcomes) in children under 5 years of age living in rural Malawi over a 2-year period.

UNIVERSE

CAPS was a cluster-randomized controlled trial with two arms of equal size comparing the effects of a cleaner-burning biomass-fueled cookstove intervention to the continued use of traditional open fire cooking on pneumonia incidence (primary outcome previously reported) and CO exposures (secondary outcomes) in children under 5 years of age living in rural Malawi over a 2-year period.

Children up to 4½ years old in Malawi allowing for a minimum of 6 months data collection before a child's 5th birthday.
